Dr. William Draper Lewis, dean of the law school of the University of Pennsylvania, considers that Mr. Roosevelt s method should be a most effective instrument for carrying on genuine popular government. It has long been the practice to amend State Constitutions by popular vote. If the entire Constitution can be thus amended, it is not a very radical change to permit the people in the same way to decide whether a particular statute shall stand. We would not assume that the court was wrong in interpreting the Constitution. We would assume that it was right. But we would assume that the people have the right to say whether or not they wanted that particular enactment as part of their law. A similar view is advanced by main in our legislatures. The Outlook editorially. It is not in favor of the recall...
