Nevertheless, in proceeding to record it, I feel much embarrassment because of the delicacy of the task. This is enhanced by the sacredness of the relation that subsisted so long between the dear departed one and myself, and by a lively remembrance of the shrinking modesty and genuine humility of her nature. For if she could give vocal utterance to her wishes, it would be most sincerely to beg me to desist from what my heart irresistibly prompts me to perform in this instance. Indeed, to no one could the following panegyric be more truthfully applied than to herself: - As streams that run o'er golden mines, Yet humbly, calmly glide, Nor seem to know the worth that shines Within their gentle tide; So, veiled beneath the simplest guise, Her radiant genius shone, And that which charmed all other eyes Seemed worthless in her own.
