And multitudes are flocking round; And travellers, as they onward roam, Approach to listen to that message strange, That bodes the advent of some wondrous change. Record and witness thou did st bear To Christ, thy Master and thy Lord; Thou wert the herald of the King, Forerunner of the Eternal Word; Nor didst thou mourn to find thy honours cease, That He, thy promised Saviour, might increase. Thine was a voice to wake and rouse The silent slumbering Church of God, To kindle to a flame the spark Whereon the oppressor had not trod: Oft was thy message on the winds upborne, Thou mighty one, midst those of woman born! Methinks I gaze upon thee now, Mid shadow of some lone palm-trees; The desert fastnesses around, The giant blast, the sweeping breeze, Making their moan; and with their wailing blent One long and thrilling cry--Repent! repent! And then at last the sudden end Of thy true, faithful mission here Didst thou from out thy dungeon see The broad red sun set calm and clear, Bathing in golden glory and red dyes, The fleecy clouds thro all the western skies? How fell with thee the evening shades? While the dim shadows gathered round: Say, --didst thou think the night of Death--The grave s long, dreamless sleep profound, Were nigh thee then--nay, even at the door? That all thy journey was so nearly o er? To...
