Createspace, United States, 2012. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Merriam Press Historical Fiction No. 15 Fourth Edition, 2012 This is a short, succinct, sometimes brutal, semi-fictionalized account of the people involved and the events that occurred from 1944 until 1952 on a jungle island in the Pacific. In brief, this is the story of 35 Japanese castaways who were marooned on a tiny island in the Pacific after their ships were sunk by American bombers, and who survived through their own innate skills and superhuman will and determination to stay alive under the most demanding circumstances. That 19 of them, including one female, managed to survive until they were ultimately rescued seven years later goes on record as an epic in the history of human endurance and fortitude. This not a World War II story, but an epic novel of survival. Although the events were triggered by the war, the fighting soon moved away from the Marianas westward toward Okinawa and Japan, and Anatahan was left as a never-to-be visited backwater world of its own, far from any shipping lanes and seldom even flown over by planes. The castaways were imprisoned in a lost jungle in the ocean, where for years no ships appeared on the horizon, no planes flew overhead, and no natives returned for fear of the demons they heard were terrorizing their former habitat. The survivors became such through their own ingenuity, determination, courage and creative talents. Many of those who failed to survive were doomed, either directly or indirectly by hatred, bullying, lust, greed, tyranny, spite, selfishness, stupidity, jealousy, anger, arrogance, envy, extortion, bribery-or combinations thereof. The Anatahan story is an embryonic allegory or morality tale of modern times. That any castaways survived...
